FOREIGN papers state that a company has been formed at St. Petersburg for the introduction of steam for the traction of pleasure trains on ice. It is proposed to employ locomotives like those on the railways, of about twenty-five or thirty horse-power, with this single difference—that the wheels are to be channelled in order to make them bite upon the ice without sensibly injuring it. The slipping of the wheels being avoided, a snow plough attached in front of the train, it is believed will be found practicable to make long journeys into Finland, Lapland, and some of the islands blocked up in winter by the ice. The plan is well supported, and it is thought that such means of communication may give life to countries which are now shut out from intercourse with other parts during the whole winter. The carriages, of course, are to be provided not only with all the necessities but all the conveniences of life, including sleeping carriages, restaurants, and ball-rooms; a carriage for games of various kinds, reading saloon, and a concert room.
